In Australia, Shires along with other heavy horse breeds played a major role in the development of industry until mechanisation took over in the 20th century, especially with large teams working on wharves and railways, and in agriculture helping develop our farming country. As pit horses they moved coal from the coal seams underground to the surface in Australian coal mines.

Non-for-Profit organisation Shire Horse Breeders are running an annual breed show where Heavy Horse owners can showcase their horses in led, harness, ridden and working classes, and where breeders can promote their studs through exhibits carrying their prefix so we help saving the heavy horse breeds for future generations.
